INSTALLATION

Audio Meets Visual

Art is for all five senses, but we rarely engage more than one. However, a recent installation commissioned by the Northwood Community Redevelopment Agency and ArtLife WPB is a treat for the eyes and ears.

Visit Blum Park or Serenity Park and the first thing you'll notice is Prismatic Tessellations, a series of steel sculptures by Molly Aubry. But step closer and you'll hear an audio component titled Voices of Northwood, by portrait photographer and short film director Ates Isildak.

sounds from Northwood, such as birds chirping, bicycle bells, basketballs bouncing, and glasses clinking. The recorded clips, which play through custom weather-resistant speakers, combine with traditional audio elements to transform into songs, ambient meditations, chill hip-hop, and dreamy blues. They interplay with Aubry's sculptures to form one cohesive art experience. (wpb.org, mollyaubry.com, strangewaverecords.com)—S.S.

Dreyfoos School of the Arts alumna Kimberlea Kressal never expected that spotting dilapidated dwellings while lost in the desert on a 109-degree day might become the inspiration to write, direct, and produce her own indie film, but such is life.

"I was grieving, and, like me, they were isolated, gutted, and barren," she says of the dwellings. "They were sad. They were haunted. And so was I. From that connection, I found the inspiration for a story I'd been aching to tell."

Kressal teamed up with fellow Dreyfoos folk—two of whom she met in 1990, in the inaugural class of what was then called the Palm Beach County School of the Arts—to make Jackrabbit Homestead. The psychological thriller stars Yara Martinez (of Jane the Virgin fame) and follows a bereft widow who inherits a homestead in the California desert.

Funded through an IndieGoGo campaign and private donations, the short film was shot with a cast and crew of 25 over four "very long" June days in Wonder Valley, California. After the film is "locked" post-production, Kressal plans to submit it to festivals. (kimberleakressal.com)—S.S.
